LESSONS TO BE LEARNED FROM TURKISH DEVELOPMENT OF WATER RESOURCES

Keynote Speaker

Erik R. Peterson

Senior Vice-President

Center for Strategic and International Studies

Director of the Global Strategy Institute at CSIS

TEPAV will be hosting a round-table meeting with an American delegation of researchers and colleagues from the Center for Strategic and International Studies (CSIS) and Sandia National Laboratories. The delegation will be headed by Erik R. Peterson who will outline CSIS's current thinking on how water supply, water demand and water management are affecting overall economic and geopolitical stability across the planet. Finally, Mr. Peterson will also present the questions the delegation hopes to answer during their one-week visit to Turkey. We would be pleased if you could join our meeting to be held at the

1st Floor Meeting Room of the TEPAV New Building

(behind the TOBB University of Economics and Technology-Söğütözü Cad.No:43 Söğütözü-ANKARA) on November 14, 2006 at 3.00pm - 5.00pm.

Meeting Agenda

- Overview of global water challenges
- Exploration of the effect of global water supply and demand imbalances on development and stability across the world
- Introduction of what CSIS expects to learn by examining the historical and current development of water resources in Turkey
